

SHEEHAN'S RESTAURANT TRIAL.

Charge Against His Detectives Dismissed
—Detectors Reserved in His Case.

Among the 204 delinquent policemen tried by Commissioner Grant yesterday were Capt. Sheehan of the West Forty-seventh street station and Detectives Felix A. Quinn and Robert A. Johnson of his command. They were accused by George W. Ryder of having threatened to arrest him without cause. The complainant said that on Oct. 21 he purchased from a man named Joseph Horan a restaurant, at 1049 Sixth avenue. He took immediate possession. The same evening Detective Quinn came into the restaurant and told him he had no right in the place, and said he was trespassing on the property.

Detective Johnson showed up a little later and made the same statement. The same night, about 10 o'clock, Capt. Sheehan visited the restaurant accompanied by his two detectives.

"The Captain told me I had no business in the place," testified Ryder. "He said I was a trespasser, and that if I attempted to lock the doors of the restaurant I would be committing a State prison act. He threatened to arrest me if I did not give up the keys of the place to Mr. Dunnigan." He admitted that he had really given up the keys to Mr. Duffy's son.

It developed during the trial that next door to the restaurant was a saloon kept by Patrick Duffy, who had leased the restaurant to Horan. Ryder offered in evidence a bill of sale showing that he had purchased from Horan the fixtures in the restaurant for $75. It was his intention to sell the place by auction. When he was called into the restaurant on the night in question Mr. Duffy told him that Ryder was in the employ of the place, and that he had no right to the premises. Horan told him that he bought the fixtures from Horan last April, and that Horan, the manager of the restaurant, had given him no right to sell the restaurant or anything in it.

"I concluded that Ryder had been swindled," said the Captain, and told Ryader that he would sue Horan. "I told Ryader that Mr. Duffy was a taxpayer and a responsible man, I advised him to settle the trouble in the easiest way possible. I also told him that he could show a bill of sale. I merely gave Ryader my honest advice, and I thought I was doing my duty."

Commissioner Grant reserved decision in Capt. Sheehan's case after dismissing the charges against the two detectives.

Business Troubles.

Corell, Werner & Co., cigar manufacturers, of 835 to 839 East Seventy-fifth street, are reported to have transferred their assets to a relative by a bill of sale, and are offering to compromise with their creditors.
